MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN

Transparency International Pakistan has advocated for the Right to Information for over two decades, recognizing access to information as central to good governance. Proactive disclosure of information by public bodies allows citizens to access government information and enables informed public participation in governance.

Pakistan's Right to Information laws, at the federal level and across all four provinces, require public bodies to proactively disclose information. This report assesses the state of compliance with these provisions across government departments at the federal level and across all four provinces.

Transparency International Pakistan hopes the departments covered in this assessment find the findings useful and act on the recommendations, contributing to greater transparency and accountability across public institutions in the country.

Justice (R) Zia Perwez

Chairman

Transparency International Pakistan

MESSAGE FROM THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Proactive disclosure is a cornerstone of transparent governance. Despite being mandated under the federal and provincial Right to Information (RTI) laws, the implementation on disclosure of essential data such as budget allocations, procurement details, service delivery metrics, and decision-making processes remain weakly implemented.

Strengthening proactive disclosure in Pakistan is essential to operationalize RTI effectively and reduce the administrative burden on information commissions. When public institutions routinely publish key information such as organizational charts, decision-making processes, performance reports, acts, ordinances and bye-laws, it eliminates the need for many formal information requests and appeals. This shift not only enhances government transparency and responsiveness but also empowers citizens, media, and civil society to play an informed role in public oversight. Embedding proactive disclosure into routine governance practices, backed by clear legal mandates and monitoring frameworks, is a critical step toward institutionalizing a culture of openness.

Keeping this in view, this report has assessed the state of proactive disclosure by government departments across the federal and provincial levels, as mandated under Pakistan's Right to Information laws. The assessment is the continuation of Transparency International Pakistan's work on strengthening Right to Information in the country.

Transparency International Pakistan is confident that this report will serve as a useful reference for improving disclosure practices across public institutions in Pakistan.

INTRODUCTION

The effectiveness of access to information is determined not simply by whether governments have adopted access to information laws, but by whether those laws translate into information that citizens can actually find, access and use.

Government websites are often the first point of contact between citizens and public institutions and, when effectively maintained, can provide direct access to information on government functions, decisions, policies, budgets, procurements, programmes and performance.

Traditional access to information approach largely places the initiative on citizens, who must identify information, submit a request and wait for a public body to respond. Proactive disclosure reverses this relationship by placing greater responsibility on public institutions to make information of public interest readily available to the citizens. It moves access to information from a request-driven model towards an open government model, in which transparency is embedded into the routine functioning of public institutions.

SDG 16 · Target 16.10

Indicator 16.10.2 measures whether countries have adopted and implemented constitutional, statutory and/or policy guarantees for public access to information.

Transparency and openness in governance, enabled through the disclosure of public information, are integral to the rule of law and meaningful citizen participation. The World Justice Project's Rule of Law Index recognizes Open Government as a core dimension of the rule of law, assessing publicized laws and government data, the right to information, civic participation, and complaint mechanisms. In the 2025 Index, Pakistan ranked 130th out of 143 countries overall, with an Open Government ranking of 109th. This underscores that the rule of law extends beyond the existence of legal rights to information to their practical implementation, including the proactive disclosure of public information and effective opportunities for citizens to scrutinize and participate in governance. Proactive disclosure therefore provides an important practical test for countries like Pakistan on whether the principles established in law are reflected in the everyday operation of government.

Pakistan's Right to Information (RTI) framework provides the legal foundation for citizens' access to information held by public bodies. The Federal Right of Access to Information Act, 2017 replaced the Freedom of Information Ordinance, 2002, while Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa enacted RTI legislation in 2013, Sindh in 2016, and Balochistan in 2021.

Together, these Acts establish obligations on public bodies to facilitate access to information and, importantly, to disclose comprehensive categories of information proactively rather than wait for citizens to file RTI request.

Proactive disclosure is a particularly important component of an effective RTI framework. Publishing information through official government websites can significantly reduce barriers to access, enable citizens and civil society to oversight public institutions, and strengthen transparency in public administration. It also shifts the emphasis of RTI from a request-based system towards a more open model of governance in which relevant public information is routinely made available.

Despite the legal requirements, the extent to which public bodies in Pakistan comply with proactive disclosure requirements remain a significant barrier to open governance. Transparency International Pakistan's previous assessments have identified substantial gaps between the information required to be disclosed under RTI laws and the information actually made available by public institutions. The availability of government information online is also inconsistent both in the level of disclosures but also in terms of their interpretation of different clauses of proactive disclosure provision requirements.

Against this backdrop, the 2026 Right to Information in Practice: Assessing Proactive Disclosure in Pakistan assessment examines the implementation of proactive disclosure requirements under Pakistan's federal and provincial RTI laws through an analysis of information published on the official websites of selected public bodies. The assessment seeks to measure the extent of compliance with statutory disclosure requirements and identify gaps in the availability and accessibility of public information. Its findings are intended to contribute to evidence-based engagement and implementation by the federal and provincial bodies and information commissions so as to pave the way for stronger implementation of RTI laws in Pakistan.

IMF · 2025 Diagnostic

Pakistan's Governance and Corruption Diagnostic identifies persistent weaknesses in transparency, accountability, institutional capacity and the rule of law, noting that limited access to information compounds these challenges.

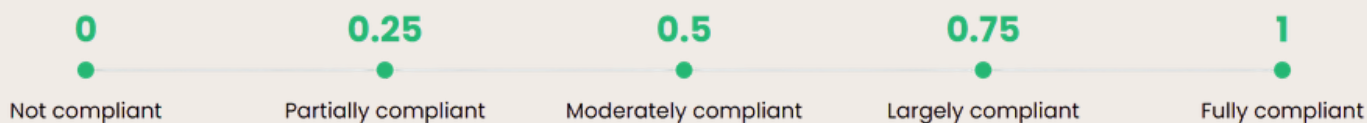

METHODOLOGY

Right to Information in Practice: Assessing Proactive Disclosure in Pakistan is an assessment of proactive disclosure of information by the departments of Federal and Provincial Governments across Pakistan against the country's Access to Information laws. The assessment is benchmarked against the following laws:

- a) Federal: Section 5 of The Right of Access to Information Act, 2017
- b) Punjab: Section 4 of The Punjab Transparency and Right to Information Act, 2013
- c) Sindh: Section 6 of The Sindh Transparency and Right of Access to Information Act, 2016
- d) Khyber Pakhtunkhwa: Section 5 of The Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Right to Information Act, 2013
- e) Balochistan: Section 5 of The Balochistan Right of Access to Information Act, 2021

Each department's official website was reviewed against the proactive disclosure provisions as mandated under the above sections of the Federal and Provincial Right to Information laws. Each clause of the proactive disclosure requirement was scored on a scale of 0 to 1, corresponding to the completeness of the information published and made accessible to the citizens through the websites.

Each clause was scored individually and a department's overall score is the average of its clause-level scores, expressed as a percentage. Each score is then placed into one of four compliance bands as below:

A jurisdiction-level compliance figure for each province and for the federal government is calculated as the average score across the departments assessed in that jurisdiction, allowing departments to be ranked within a province and at federal level.

RECOMMENDATIONS

- 01 Develop Standardised Proactive Disclosure Formats: Information Commissions should develop simple, standardised formats for proactive disclosure, specifying the information required under each clause of proactive disclosure. The assessment indicates considerable variation in how public bodies interpret and implement proactive disclosure requirements. Therefore, consistent guidance will reduce variations in interpretation and help public bodies better understand the nature of information which must be disclosed and comply with the legal obligations.

- 02 Strengthen Capacity of Public Information Officers: Information Commissions must provide regular capacity building to Public Information Officers (PIOs) on proactive disclosure requirements. Heads of public bodies must ensure institutional support for PIOs to maintain timely and comprehensive disclosure of information as required under the Right to Information laws.

- 03 Strengthen Disclosure of Budget and Expenditure Information: Public bodies must ensure timely and comprehensive online disclosure of budget and expenditure information, including approved budgets, revised estimates, and actual expenditure for the current financial year. Budget information currently scores below 40% and remains one of the weakest compliances across the jurisdictions. It is also important that budget information must be updated annually and presented in a clear, accessible format to enable meaningful public access on the use of public resources.

- 04 Publish PIO Contact Details on Every Department Website: In Balochistan and Sindh in particular, disclosure of Public Information Officer details and the manner of requesting information scored among the lowest of all clauses (12% and 14% respectively). Since this clause underpins the entire request-based RTI system as a fallback where proactive disclosure fails, Information Commissions must direct every public body to maintain on website clear details regarding PIO's name, designation, contact details.

- 05 Mandate Disclosure of Decision-Making Processes and Public Consultation Opportunities: Public bodies should disclose information on departmental decision-making processes, including the procedures and stages through which decisions are made. They should also publish details of policies, regulations, and decisions open for public consultation, along with applicable deadlines and clear mechanisms through which citizens can submit comments or feedback.

- 06 Establish Minimum Website Standards with a Dedicated RTI Section: Federal and Provincial Information Departments should establish minimum website standards for public bodies, including a clearly visible and standardised "Right to Information" section on the websites homepages. Given the considerable variation in the type, structure, and accessibility of information currently disclosed, mandatory minimum standards would promote consistency and ensure that RTI compliance is assessed not only by the availability of information, but also by whether citizens can easily locate and access it.
