KEY PUBLIC SECTOR INSTITUTIONS SEEN AS CORRUPT

The survey asked citizens how corrupt they thought various key influential groups and institutions in their country were. Across the globe, the police and elected representatives (such as members of parliament, congressmen, senators etc.) were seen to be most corrupt – followed closely by government officials, business executives and local government officials.

Q. How many of the following people do you think are involved in corruption, or haven't you heard enough about them to say? Base: all respondents, excluding missing responses. Chart shows percentage of respondents who answered that either "most" or "all" of them are corrupt.

In the 2013 Global Corruption Barometer survey, when we asked a similar question, the police, political parties, public officials and parliament also came top as being perceived as the most corrupt.

When comparing the results between regions, in both Asia Pacific and Sub Saharan Africa police were seen as the most corrupt, with 39 per cent and 47 per cent of people respectively said most or all police officers were corrupt. In Europe and Central Asia elected representatives were seen as the most corrupt (31 per cent). In the Americas both the police and elected representatives fared worst (46 per cent both), while in the Middle East and North Africa elected representatives, tax officials and government officials were thought to be highly corrupt by 45 per cent of the population, a higher percentage than for any other institution.
